

Holly Meidl is Marsh's U.S. National Practice Leader for health care as well as a client executive for several large health systems. As practice leader, she is responsible for directing approximately 500 Marsh colleagues who provide daily service to hundreds of hospitals, physicians, managed care organizations, and senior care providers across the United States.

Holly's main focus is to help clients identify the key industry issues they face, then work with practice colleagues to develop innovative risk and clinical solutions to address those risks. In addition to her direct client work, Holly is responsible for establishing client focused solution sets, servicing protocols and meaningful benchmarking reports to assist clients in reducing their total cost of risk and improve patient safety.

Holly has over 20 years of brokerage experience working with large global clients in various industries such as Technology, Finance and global Manufacturing on alternative risk solutions including captives, loss portfolio transfers, spreadloss, and integrated risk programs for property and casualty exposures.

Holly's experience in the health care industry was honed during her tenure as practice leader for the HealthCare Practice in Chicago during the Illinois medical malpractice crisis of the early 2000s, establishing segregated cell captives, moving to high increased self funding, and setting up physician channeling programs.

Since 2007, Holly has lead Marsh's National HealthCare Practice and is often sought out for commentary in national periodicals on changing risks in health care, authoring several white papers, as well as speaking at various conferences and seminars across the United States.
